Dear St Paul of the Cross Parishioners,

A few years ago on a busy morning I was driving to Queen of All Saints Basilica during rush hour when I noticed something. We were coming to some construction and the two lanes were merging into one. I am usually a calm person who does not get upset very easily. However, the way some people drive really gets to me. While many of us were in the left lane patiently waiting, some drivers thought they were smarter than all of us. They tried to get ahead of everyone by cutting in. I would have loved to block their progress. Thank God, I didn't. As I was trying to calm myself down, I wondered why people were in such a hurry.

That incident made me think of some other similar ones. A few years earlier I was meeting a friend for breakfast at a pancake house (Boy, I love pancakes!). As we walked in, I saw a family of about eight sitting at a table. While most of the family members were engaged in a spirited conversation, their teenage daughter was texting someone on her phone. I wondered why we would ignore the people in our presence to connect with someone far away.

Sometime ago I was talking to a dad whose only child is going away to college. He was justifiably getting emotional. He realized that his life was changing. He was making every attempt to squeeze in one more activity, to create one more memory, with his son. I wonder whether the dad was regretting missed opportunities with his child. We all wish we had more time with someone when we are about to say good-bye.

These three episodes point out for me the same lesson: We are filled with regrets when we refuse to embrace the moment. We live a market culture that is bent on promising new experiences all the time. They try very hard to seduce us into thinking that the adventures to come will be much better than the ones at hand. In succumbing to their seduction we lose out on the experiences that are right under our noses. Senior citizens who have recently discovered smart phones and are adamant about taking pictures at baptisms and weddings remind me of the same temptation. They are more concerned about recording an event for the future while they miss out on the present experience.

As we begin another school year, I invite all of us to embrace the moment. Even though we know it in our hearts, we don't admit that time relentlessly marches on. The past is gone and the future is not promised. What we have is just the present. Instead of waiting for a better day or someone other than the one right here, can we give our full attention and effort to the task at hand, to the person standing in our presence? Before we realize it, our children will have grown and our teenagers will have marched off to college. Let us cherish every moment with them. Let us live in the present. Let us not be blind to the experiences that God presents us today.

I came across a simple, beautiful prayer sometime ago and it speaks to my suggestion to embrace the moment. Maybe we can recite it every morning and ask the Lord to help us live in the present, taking one day at a time.

Dear Lord, I know that I am kinder when I slow down.
When I am less rushed,
I can find time for people who need a kind word or a helping hand.
When my nerves are calm, I can listen better to someone who needs a friend.
When I am attentive to the moment, I can give my heart to the tasks at hand.

Teach me, Lord, that wisdom comes to those who embrace the moment.
Let me understand that it is not the swift who win the race,
that doing good requires more than being active.
Calm my frayed nerves. Soothe my frenzied mind. Slow me down.
Make me realize that I may not be able to finish today all that I must accomplish.
I may not even do them as well as I wish I could.

Help me seize the day, embrace the moment,
be attentive to the person in front of me.
May I resist the temptation to live in some distant future!
Today is all I have. Today is Your gift to me.
Let me love my family, my friends, and everyone around me.
Let me make the best of the time You give me.
May I come to the end of my day totally content because I spent it for You and for others.

We ask this in Jesus' name. Amen.

Before you go to sleep tonight, hug your children, kiss your spouse, say a kind word to your friend. Make the best of the time that He gives you. Embrace the moment!

May the God of time and eternity bless our days and make them fruitful!

Yours warmly,

Fr. Buito

ALL ARE WELCOME!

NURSE'S NOTES.....

Hello everyone!

Looking at a frozen arctic landscape can be dramatic and beautiful. Consuming a tasty, frozen dessert can be a delightful experience. Having a frozen shoulder---not so enjoyable! When a shoulder is frozen, movement is painful and difficult if the sufferer tries to move it and also if another, like a doctor, tries to move it as well. With this condition, the capsule "that lines the shoulder joint, shrinks and becomes thickened with constricting bands of tissue". This process eventually leads to a shoulder that cannot move, a shoulder with "adhesive capsulitis", (another name for frozen shoulder). This problem can also develop as a result of fibrous tissue or adhesion formation. Adhesions are an "abnormal joining of structures that have been separated by incision". Usually, there is no underlying disease process present, like arthritis, but a frozen shoulder can develop after a minor injury or as the result of an inflammation causing problem like bursitis or tendonitis. (Tendons are like a rope connecting a muscle to a bone and the bursa are fluid filled areas of "cushion" between a bone and a tendon.) Some athletes or folks who repeat a movement consistently, over time, may develop a frozen shoulder. Oddly, chronic pulmonary disease, as well as diabetes and a heart problem may also lead to frozen shoulder, but why this happens is unclear. A typical sufferer is a woman aged fifty or over. The symptoms are pain and stiffness in one shoulder, developing overtime, but occasionally, developing rapidly. Pain upon movement or when being touched is usually present and sleeping on that shoulder may not be tolerable. Diagnosis can be made via the symptoms and by x-ray. If osteopenia, (loss of bone density perhaps followed by osteoporosis), is suspected as a cause, an x-ray can help diagnosis. Treatment can include injecting a corticosteroid drug directly into the affected joint. Over the counter drugs like Tylenol or aspirin, etc., can also be helpful. Physical therapy may be recommended, with special exercises designed to help mobility of the shoulder, while also helping to break-up any adhesions that may have formed there. Many people with frozen shoulder improve within twelve to eighteen months, but unfortunately, some are left with permanently restricted movement. Bumps, lumps and knots in the palm of the hands and on the inside of the fingers, with thickening of the skin over the knots may herald a problem called finger contractions. There may be shortening and rigidity of the finger and curvature as well. Pain can occur and can spread to other parts of the hand. The fingers shorten because the connective tissue, or fascia, that runs into them through the palm of the hand, becomes thickened and pulls the fingers inward. Mostly seen in older men who work with their hands, this condition is becoming more common in younger people who work consistently on keyboards, etc., requiring consistent repetitive hand movement. People who have diabetes or other chronic problems as well as alcoholism may have a higher risk for finger contractions. There may be an inherited susceptibility as well. The soles of the feet can be affected, (with the toes), also, in some instances. Tingling and numbness can occur. The most effective treatment is surgery. Some of the knotted thickened tissue may be removed and the shortened fascia may be cut by a hand specialist physician. This surgery has a better outcome if the surgery is done before the fingers become severely crippled. When using repetitive hand movements, stopping and gently exercising and massaging the hands is recommended to be done every 2 to 3 hours. Flexing the fingers frequently can also be helpful. Till next week let's remember that it's best to, "never cut what can be untied". Have a healthy week!

Fondly, Linda Burk

PERPETUAL EUCHARISTIC ADORATION CHAPEL

THE STORM AND THE CHAPEL

Living our Catholic Faith is not easy and wasn't intended to be easy. Jesus never promised followers a serene non-eventful life. Our Faith challenges the weaknesses of human beings and is often conflicted with everyday events, political-ly, morally and socially.

Trying to live our Faith is like being a boat in the middle of a storm. We see a combination of troubles, obstacles, and attacks on our traditions, spawned by hate, selfishness and lack of respect for each other, all in some way, a removal of God from our lives. These may create doubts in many people as to what we can do to survive these constant assaults on our beliefs. Some stray from the Faith, others are terribly weakened. The net result is that souls may be lost.

Through all this turbulence, there are two words that rise as a stopgap, and will help to give balance to us in a stormy sea, GOD and PERSEVERANCE. Despite any burdens that we are to suffer in our lives, we have God, our light through any darkness. His love will always light our way through our burdens to a safe shore. At the same time, we demonstrate our love to God by our perseverance, based on hope, to stay the course in our prayer and confidence in Him.

One of the graces God has given us is our Eucharistic Adoration Chapel, which in holiness, exposes Jesus, His Body and Blood, Soul and Divinity in the Sacred White Host. He is there, He knows we need Him to help us in our lives to save our souls. He will not leave us because we are entrapped in His love. What we bring to Him are our fears and hopes and our gifts of confidence and humility.
